PART I. THE MEDIAEVAL PERIOD

BOOK I.

PRELIMINARY—THE LAND AND THE PEOPLE

CHAPTER I. INTRODUCTORY

1. The Scope of Mediaeval History.

A. The Scope of European History—The history of Europe or European civilisation begins in Greece. Though it has received additions of the most important and revolutionary kind from Rome, from Judaea, and from other sources, it has never lost the impress of the original impulses given in Greece. From this small corner of Europe the light of European civilisation spread first over all Mediterranean lands; then over all the lands of Western Europe; and finally over a great part of the world. European History is the story of the expansion of this light of European civilisation.

B. The Scope of Mediaeval History—Mediaeval history of Europe tells the story of the fusion of the three elements—Roman, Christian, and Teutonic. The Teutonic peoples entered the Roman empire, adopted the Christian religion, and developed a new Europe and a new civilisation in Europe. The falling fragments of the majestic Roman polity and culture were gathered together and developed by the Teutonic peoples under the dominating influence of the Christian Religion and Church. Thus arose a new world—the "German World," and a new civilisation—the Mediaeval European civilisation.
